Tell me what you want, what you really really want. Jan Verwoert;

edited by Vanessa Ohlraun

Rotterdam: Piet Zwart Institute, 2010

2011/046 ,7.01,VE:RW"2010

The book galvanizes central themes Verwoert has been developing in pursuit of a language to describe art's transformative potential in conceptual, performative, and emotional terms. He analyzes the power of public gestures to constitute communities as well as the pressure to perform that governs the sphere of creative labor, in order to show how particular artists perform gestures and invoke community differently. Exploring the emotional power games that shape social relations, Verwoert looks for an alternative ethos of action and feeling, asking: How can a modernist approach to artistic form as a means of social critique be expanded to fully avow its subliminal affective undercurrents, and produce a pleurably crooked form of criticality in art and writing?

Potosi principle : how can we sing the song of the lord in an alien land? : colonial image production in the global economy. edited by Alice Creischer, Max Jorge Hinderer, Andreas Siekmann

Koln: Verlag der Buchhandlung Walter König, 2010

2011/041 ,7.015.2,PO:T"2010

Potosí is a Bolivian mining town, whose splendor even eclipsed that of London or Paris in the 16th-century. The silver extracted there by forced labourers was instrumental in fuelling the development of early European capitalism. The dynamics of this economic colonialism spawned the production of images on a mass scale, not only in Spain, but also in the vice-royalty itself. The works of the "Andean Baroque" unveiled in "The Potosí Principle" attest to the fact that cultural hegemony is not a symbolic concept, but is, in fact, rooted in violence. Contemporary artists have responded to these Baroque paintings by fashioning works of their own. The objective of this dialogue is to demonstrate the correlation between the function served by colonial painting and the function now assumed by the modern system of art in conferring legitimacy upon globalizations new elites.

2011/091 ,7.039,BE:Y"2011

Beyond the Dust – Artists' Documents Today provides the public with a theoretical hypothesis on the use and manipulation of forms, images and texts by artists. The objective is to highlight the formal implications of these actions and their philosophical, political and social content. The artists will not only reflect on the potential themes raised by the various components of the pieces, but will offer a broader reflection on contemporary ways of understanding memory and the notions of authenticity, fiction and forgery. An exhibition in three parts.

Dit boek biedt een caleidoscopische visie op hedendaagse kunst uit Centraal-Europa, gepresenteerd in the historische setting van Brugge. Het terugkerende thema van de omnipresente geschiedenis en hoe dat zich artistiek vertaalt via het geheugen, zo aanwezig in het werk van Luc Tuymans, biedt hier een uniek uitgangspunt voor een ongewoon visueel onderzoek.

Scientific police photographs are very rarely presented to the public, remaining stored for many years in confidential files because they transgress taboos when their subjects are violent death and crime. These pictures, taken almost a hundred years ago by Rodolphe Archibald Reiss, founder of the l'Institut de police scientifique of the Université de Lausanne, reveal their entire aesthetic dimension while retaining their intense emotional strength. As a forensic science pioneer, Reiss shows photographic skills which are unequalled in this field.
